BACKBONE OF THE PROJECT

National investigations have shown:

- a high prevalence of sexual abuse in residential care and foster care (E.g Samson et al. 2012).
- professionals perceive very few of the cases of sexual abuse in residential and foster care and in many cases the perpetrators turn out to be peers.
- incapability of professionals in discussing and supporting healthy sexual development and behavior with/of children, young people, their (foster) parents and other professionals in order to prevent for sexual abuse in residential and foster care.
- lack of the knowledge and skills to support a healthy sexual development in children and young people.
- incapability of recognizing unacceptable sexual behavior, setting limits and making them subject of discussion and intervening effectively.

As a consequence, competences on how to support a healthy sexual development in children and young people and how to recognize and act upon unacceptable sexual behavior should be gained during (social work) education.

What do children and young people in residential care need for a healthy sexual development?

PURPOSE OF THE PROJECT

- To equip higher education students and professionals with knowledge and tools to be able to prevent sexual abuse of children as a professional, and to support vulnerable children in their development related to safe and healthy sexual behavior.
- Educational mobility
- Dissemination

GOAL

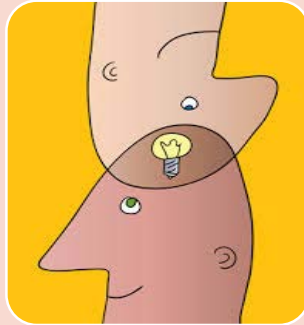

To develop an educational program for (future) professionals working in residential and foster care that provides:

- knowledge on healthy sexual development
- skills on discussing intimacy, relations and sexual development with children, young people, their (foster)parents and other professionals
- skills and tools on sexual education (including e.g. feelings, gender-aspects and 'knowing your own body') and setting norms in relation to unacceptable sexual behaviour of children and young people, their (foster)parents and other professionals
- knowledge and skills to take social, religious and cultural diversity on sexual matters into account.

OUTCOMES of the project:

RESEARCH

- 1.a review of available materials (e.g. training programs, guidelines and tools)
- 2.expert interviews
- 3.focus groups with professionals working in residential or foster care
